BABY IN M'COMB WILL CONTEST.

Mrs. Florenze McComb Herzog Finds Child of a Few Weeks Called Into Court to Become Party to Suit.

OBJECT SAID TO BE DELAY.

Daughter of Millionaire Who Married Artist Despite Adverse Provision in Her Father's Will Not Called On by Family.

The birth of a baby to Mrs. Fannie McComb Herzog is expected to introduce to-day a new plaintiff into the contest of James J. McComb's will by the young mother.

When McComb died he left a fortune of $12,000,000 and a will which contained codicil providing that only $15,000 a year was to go to Miss Fanny if she married Louis E. Herzog, a Philadelphia artist, to whom she was engaged. Heedless of the codicil, Miss Fanny married her artist on Dec. 31, 1901, and in March she started suit to break the will. Since then a baby has been born to her, and it is now the petition of the defendants, the other heirs of the estate, that this baby be made a party to the suit. This petition will be argued to-day in the Supreme Court.

Out of the suit has grown a bitter family feud. Mrs. Herzog and her attorneys are strong in their denunciation of the treatment accorded her by her two sisters, Mrs. Granville W. Garth. wife of the President of the Mechanics' National Bank, and Mrs. Dawson Coxe, wife of a doctor, and her brother, Joseph J. McComb. Delay Said to Be Sought.

After the birth of her baby she says none of them called on her, but instead filed the petition to make the child a party to the suit. R. E. Howison, attorney for Mrs. Herzog, believes that the motive of the petition is not sincere, the petitioner merely wishing to delay the case. The case has already been argued and Justice Truax in March had taken the matter under advisement, his decision being daily expected.

argued and Justice Truax in March had taken the matter under advisement, his decision being daily expected.

If the baby be made a party the case will have to be gone over again, thus causing another year's delay.

"The object for this move is obvious," said Attorney Howison. "The family fear that they will be beaten, and hope by securing this order to delay Judge Truax's decision. And they have double reason to dread the presentation of her case before a jury of men of the world. She will have no difficulty in proving that her father, in the agonies of a last illness, was in no condition to reason clearly and fairly, and was peculiarly susceptible to the influence exerted on him by his eldest son, Joseph J. McComb.

"Only one thing prevented the full orm by his eldest son, Joseph J. Mc-Comb.

"Only one thing prevented the full reconcilisation of father and daughter, and this was the determined opposition of the others in the family, who feared the loss of an extra fortune each year.

"I am convinced that Mr. McComb would have made no opposition had he been in possession of his faculties. There are no words to tell how deeply Mrs. Herzog felt the neglect of her family when her child was born."

Anxious to Tell Story.

Mrs. Herzog was very anxious to tell her story to a jury, and she may yet have the opportunity to do so. If she does she will tell how her father, then a young man and without fortune, wooed and won the heart of Miss Esther Wood, daughter of the famous New Orleans banker, of how Banker Wood frowned upon him, drove him from the house and told his daughter he would disinherit her if she married him.

McComb was dismissed by Miss Wood, went into the world, invented the belt packing which gave him a fortune, forgot his former sweetheart and married a daughter of a bank cashier, by whom he had his four children. But after her death he recalled Miss Wood. Finding her a spinster in New Orleans, still loving him, he married her and built for the mansion known as Estherwood, at Dob's Ferry. Grief at his loss caused her death three days later.

He tried to yell, but his vocal chords were so saily strained by the stretching that he made sounds like a tenor singing from a phonograph. While he squeaked and struggled another man went through his clothes. Th pocket in which the money had been stuffed was ripped open and the cash taken. His watch was also gobbled, and then, as Fitzgerald still struggled, the men let him go.

With a roar the Brooklynite, who had fallen to the pavement, sprang to his feet. Detectives Jackson and Keahon heard the roar and saw the men running away. They grabbed one before he had gone a block. The other chap got away for the time being, but they had a good look at him and arrested him a little later in a saloon.

MILK-WAGON A FIRE-ESCAPE. Tenants Helped from Burning Building to Vehicle.

(Special to The Evening World.)
PASSAIC, N. J., Dec. 29.—A milkwagon was used as a fire-escape for the twenty occupants of a burning tenenent at Passaio and Sixth streets, here, early to-day. The building was owned by J. & A. Tony Petrellio, a bank watchman, was stones through the windows, awakening the Steinbergs. Then he stopped a milk-wagon that was going by, had it driven to the side of the house, and, by standing on the top, managed to assist the men and women from the building. When all were out Mrs. Steinberg remembered her eight months' old child, which she had left in bed. Petrellio ran into the building and rescue it. The total loss, $13,000, is covered by insurance.

The despatches from Philadelphia say that in the woman's purse was found a note from C. E. Burns from Cell No. 186, Moyamensing Prison.

The explanation of this is that last Wednesday at 3 o'clock in the morning Dolite Earle, found Policeman Jackson on Eleventh street, Philadelphia, and told him that her husband was smoking opium in a den on Franklin street, above Race, demanding that he raid the place and arrest the occupanys. Jackson and arrest the occupanys. Jackson and another soliceman raided the opium joint and in the raid was C. E. Burns, whom Dolite Earle claimed as her husband. He was sen't to prison to sawait trial, which was to have been this morning. The note from him begged her not to prosecute him.

Burns is of the lower type of actors, the police say, who travel with burlesque companies, doing odd jobs and living as the husbands of the women in the company.

Dollie Earle attempted to kill herself a few days before Bauerschmidt brought her to New York. She had disgraced the family by appearing at a ball while very drunk, and when her husband took her home and put her to bed she got up in the night and turned on the gas. She was discovered in time to save her life and her husband then moved to New York with her.

Soon after their separation the doctors ordered Bauerschmidt to Colorado and the last reports from there indicate that he is near death from consumption and worry over his wife. "Our child, Howard, was taken by my husband to Mount Vernon, where he years, and needs a mother's care and
